

International Political Economy of China

Short Course: Spring 2025

Once an exporter of socialist revolution and foreign aid during the Mao era, China is now a leading global power in trade, investment, and development finance.

China is blurring boundaries between the state and business, challenging conventional ideas about development, and remaking international economic institutions. Course topics include China's trade, investment, development finance, participation in international institutions like the World Trade Organization and World Bank, and the U.S.-China trade war.
