

International Political Economy of China

Short Course: Spring 2026

China is a leader in international trade, investment, and development finance. How did it transform from a poor country into a global economic power? This course examines China's rise and how it is remaking global economic rules and practices. Topics include China's trade and the U.S.-China trade war; outbound investment and the Belt and Road Initiative; development finance; and China's role in the WTO, World Bank, and other multilateral institutions. All students are welcome.
